

Additional Information

I'm Tyler Ray, a nurse, father and unionist, standing for Fremantle Council with WA Socialists. I've seen firsthand how inequality harms people's health and lives, and I believe our city should put people before profit. My daughter attends public school, and I am committed to defending and improving high-quality public education so every child has the same opportunities, not just those from wealthy families.

Fremantle must remain a working port, not a playground for mega-yachts and developers. The port has sustained jobs and communities for generations, and its future must be secured for workers, not sold off for private profit. I will also fight for renters' rights, caps on soaring rents, and serious investment in public and community housing so working people can afford to live here and Fremantle retains its diversity and character.

As a nurse and unionist, I know the importance of care and solidarity. I'll push council to expand services for the elderly, the homeless, and vulnerable people, ensuring dignity, shelter, and support for all. I believe a city should be judged by how it treats its most vulnerable not by how many luxury apartments it builds.

Fremantle should also stand for justice beyond our borders. I support the Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions (BDS) movement and oppose Israel's genocide against Palestinians, just as people of conscience once opposed apartheid South Africa. Solidarity is not optional; it is our duty.

I'm proud to stand with WA Socialists, a new party built on the belief that real change comes from ordinary people organising together. We are committed to fighting for housing, climate justice, workers' rights, and international solidarity. We reject the influence of big business, developers, and career politicians. Fremantle has a proud history of union struggle and community resistance. WA Socialists aim to carry that forward.
